FROM THE PRESIDENT

PETER MCGREGOR

.....materialistic life has become something of a monster for many people..."

Some will remember cartoonist Michael Leunig's most trying to get away from. "They are looking for freedom famous cartoon many years ago showing a little man sitting in a bare room staring at the picture on his TV set of the sun rising; beside him an open window through which we see an actual sunrise. Could anyone be so foolish as to prefer watching a broadcast of anything to the real thing? Well, yes. In May I was on board a bus touring the beautiful city of Bordeaux and was amazed to see an American woman in the seat in front of me taking in the sights via her iPad. Artists such as Leunig – through his cartoon characters Mr Curly or Vasco Pyjama - have a rare talent of drawing our attention to stupidity or great beauty, jolting us into facing realities we might otherwise avoid. However, Leunig is more than a mere cartoonist; he is also a philosopher who believes that the important questions about the meaning of life are not so much about what people are looking for as what they are from what oppresses them," he says," and modern materialistic life has become something of a monster for many people, whether debt - or fear of what is to become of their children." Christmas is some weeks back now but one of its joys is the opportunity to get together with one's family and friends and, for even a short time, escape from the increasingly frenzied lives we lead – not to mention the stupidity of reindeer, sleigh bells and faux-snow (while it is 40 degrees in the shade outside every other day) – and/or the waste and conspicuous consumption that surrounds us each December. A perfect example was our yuletide gettogether at Woodlands Golf Club where so many members and wives relaxed in each other's company, shared an excellent meal and fine wines, enjoyed the beautiful seasonal music, breathed a sigh of relief and celebrated in style another successful Probus year.

Death and Taxes***

We are often told that death and taxes are the only certainties in life but solicitor David Davis advised us about some of the uncertainties – all the things that can occur when preparing a Will. What would appear in the first instance to be a simple task can sometimes become an extremely complex exercise. As we know, family friction can arise when family businesses are involved or with the transfer of shares, property or other assets, very often in the farming community – including superfunds, trusts, shareholder agreements, divorces, de-facto relationships, grandchildren or other beneficiaries such as charities. The final result can be quite contrary to the wishes and intent of the original Will. David suggests we re-visit our Will every two years to ensure our wishes are still in sync with changing circumstances, and be aware of the ramifications of taxes such as Capital Gains. "Unfortunately, you cannot rely on the law to help negotiate any unintended consequences as the legislation is not always clear", he said.

Alan Williams

Global Catastrophes

Neither August 4, 2014, nor Anzac Day 2015 is cause for celebration as they were both global catastrophes

"The trauma of war is not confined to the battlefield ..."

Brian Burton spoke from the heart when he shared with us a few thoughts on Remembrance Day. Over the next two years we will be commemorating two 100-year military milestones: the first on August 4. 2014, the anniversary of World War I; the second, Anzac Day 2015, commemorating the beginning of the Gallipoli Campaign. Brian said that neither of these events is cause for celebration as they were global catastrophes incurring many thousands of casualties – 9000 Australian lives lost at Gallipoli alone. His concern is that the ceremony at Gallipoli may become a Disneyland theme-park affair rather than the solemn remembrance of those who died for their country. The trauma of war is not confined to the battlefield - many returned servicemen and women experienced crippling wounds as well as the effects of post-traumatic stress disorder on their well-being and that of their families. Alan Williams

*David Davis, Solicitor. Anyone needing further advice about any of the wide range of issues raised by our speaker in November should contact President Peter McGregor or Secretary John Howe.
