FROM THE PRESIDENT

I have just confirmed my belief that we have in Victoria, the most wonderfully varied scenery with fascinating places to visit within a few hours’ drive of Melbourne. Our four-day tour to Bright and surrounds was packed with exciting points of interest in the ‘high country’. Robert Dun’s flair for organisation was outstanding. He tells you more about this trip later in this newsletter (p4). Following from my last report, I would like to encourage more members to join our many functions and activities. As I have found, they are so enjoyable. In the near future, we have nine lucky people going on a unique trip to see Lake Eyre in flood, starting on July 3. Places on this trip have been much in demand and it should be quite fabulous. We hope they enjoy their experiences and when they return, tell us of their many adventures!

My special thanks to Vice President, Alan Farmer, for his support at our May meeting while I was away. I have had reports that it was a great success, in particular, with our May Keynote Speaker, Anita Nayar, Consul General for India, providing an informative and challenging address about Australia’s on-again-off-again relations with India since the era of the White Australia policy.

I would ask you all to ensure to make a point of approaching new members at each of our meetings to make them feel welcome. Also, please invite guests who may like to become new members of our club and hear our range of excellent speakers. At present, I am busy contacting guest speakers for the coming months. However, as I look through some of the profiles of our members, I am convinced that we have many members who would make compelling speakers at our meetings. Please give some thought to making a contribution.

This month, we look forward to learning more about another fascinating country, China, from our Keynote Speaker, Paul Carolan. Eric Slater

Next Meeting: 10 am Tuesday June 15 at Beaumaris RSL

Investment Group: Do we buy green bananas and wait? 9 am before the main Meeting. See p4
10-Minute Speaker: Jim McGann I Remember

Keynote Speaker: Paul Carolan Teacher of Chinese language at Melbourne Grammar
Topic: Understanding China Today Paul will give a brief introduction to Chinese history, its influence on the development of today’s China and therefore its relationship with Australia. He will also examine the current position of China in the world and comment on its foreseeable future. Questions and discussion to follow.
Consul General for India, Ms Anita Nayar receives thanks and a gift from Paul Crompton, Consul General for India, during his address last May as Keynote Speaker for May.

Keynote Speaker for May, Consul General for India, Ms Anita Nayar, began her address by speaking of the history of links between our two countries, including the possibility of a genetic connection between some tribes in India and aboriginal people dating back many thousands of years. Also, when famine struck the first settlers at Sydney Cove, it was ships carrying food from Bengal that helped allay the shortages. Later, many people of Indian origin came to work as labourers and camel drivers. Despite very good relations when India achieved its independence in 1947, during the Menzies years the relationship deteriorated and trade diminished. During the Cold War period, relations cooled even further.

Today, Ms Nayan is confident that Australian and Indian relations will improve despite the current problems with the Indian student program. She believes the prime reason for this unpleasantness was the significant changes made to the Work-Related Immigration Policy, including a relaxation of the screening of applicants in India - with the result that the Australian system for obtaining immigration visas was considered the easiest in the world. Not surprisingly, the Indian student population in Victoria jumped from 2,000 students in 2002 to 50,000 in 2008! Not all were genuine students; their numbers included those whose applications to the USA and the UK had been rejected and who only had to complete a cooking or a hairdressing course to be guaranteed permanent residency in Australia. A fiasco, Ms Nayar said, which contributed to the social problems of overcrowded accommodation and difficulties in obtaining reasonable employment - other than driving taxis, low-paid cafe workers, cleaners and other after-hours employment. As a result, many came into contact with delinquents who roam our streets looking for soft targets to rob and assault. Many of the perpetrators of these violent attacks were from different ethnic groups, but the main focus of the Indian media was to highlight the racial aspect. Our post-war White Australia Policy, long since dismantled, has not been totally forgotten or forgiven in India. Ms Nayan added that the failure of the Victorian Government to admit there was a problem, despite all the evidence to the contrary, did not help. A more strict policy is now in place and successful applications have dropped by 90%.

Many of the perpetrators of these violent attacks were from different ethnic groups

However, the Consul General said, both countries are now aware that they each have much in common and that they must work to build a framework for co-operation. A study is currently underway as a first step towards a Free Trade Agreement that, if successful, would benefit each country by as much as $40 billion.

MONTHLY PROFILE

David O'Loughlin

In 1976, similar to recent times, Lake Eyre was in flood and a group of adventurers set off from bayside Melbourne to make the most of the unnatural occurrence. There was Jon Olsen (the painter), Vincent Serventy (environmentalist), our own David O'Loughlin who was responsible for the boat, and some others. David's photos show his friends surveying the remote landscape and the many thousands of pelicans that nestled on several of the recently-created islands. David supplied the boat because he was in the boat business - and before that, the car business - and he had met these people through mutual friends.

In a talk he gave to Beaumaris Probus several years ago, David spoke about being part of the early history of open air car yards. After studying at RMIT, he had accepted a position as a book-keeper in a car yard. In those days, the company he worked for was prepared to accept a cow (or anything) as a trade-in; including blocks of land. "In fact," he says, "we gained some free publicity in the press when they photographed a customer arriving with a horse float to trade in his horse on a horseless carriage." In 1960, he purchased a property opposite Dendy Park on the Nepean Highway and opened a Honda agency which he called Park View Car Sales; a couple of years later, he founded Park View Marine on part of the property, an agency for Caribbean and Bertram boats. He retired from business in 1984.

In his earlier talk, he gave some insight into why used car salesmen got such a bad reputation. He told stories of how some employed a professional tyre-groover to recut the tread patterns half an inch deeper to restore the car to its road-worthy condition and turned back speedometers to whatever mileages it was thought buyers would consider believable. David emphasised, however, that these (and other) apparently 'shonky' practices were legal at the time. He also had some hair-raising adventures with boats. On one occasion, for example, he decided to test a timber cabin-boat he had received as a trade-in, taking his two sons out on the bay – only to discover it had a major leak, not a result of spray as he first thought. By speeding up, he noticed that some of the water filling the boat spilled out, so he headed for the shore flat out, just managing to run it up the boat ramp before it sank! He also managed to sink a boat in a 50-mile race on the Gippsland Lakes, clinging to the orange marker before people realised he was in trouble. These days, David spends his time playing golf at Victoria Golf Club two or three times a week and playing tennis at the Black Rock Bowls Club with a group of friends. He is also one of our vital network of posties who hand-deliver the newsletter to several other members.

Plus other Phillip Island attractions

This day will have something for both the boys and the girls! The Vietnam Veterans museum will surprise and enthral you and (probably) your wife and partner, too. It is a place for reflection on the events of our longest war. There is a vast display of weaponry on display, including a Bell Sioux, a fully-armed Cobra Gunship, Centurion tank, Howitzer, a Canberra Bomber and many vehicles, amongst 25 000 other items. There are photographs and some extremely emotional letters and other items.

Perhaps the highlight is a superbly produced Light & Sound show that presents the story of our involvement in Vietnam. “It really is an emotional ride through time,” Geoff Bransbury says. “After the museum and weather-dependent, we will visit the Nobbies and/or the Chocolate Factory. We will, of course, have a nice lunch!”

My First Love

Noel Ineson's 10-minute tale of love began in December 1950 whilst working as a young Development Engineer at the Mt Isa copper mine when he received a letter from Vickers Armstrong Engineering in the UK - in response to his application for a position - inviting him to come to Newcastle-on-Tyne and join the company. He left Australia in January 1951 and found himself working on the shop floor of the Vickers factory beside the locals - known as 'geordies' - manufacturing a diverse range of products such as tractors, various marine engines and parts, and doing fit-outs on aircraft carriers. Noel had some humorous examples of the Geordie dialect which is based on Old English and still used in the Tyne-side region today. He obtained lodgings with an elderly couple who soon introduced him to black pudding - he was obliged to acquire a taste for this unusual 'delicacy' because of the extreme shortage of meat products in post-war England. But he was later forced to move on to new lodgings after lighting a nice warming fire while the landlords were out one evening - which managed to dislodge more than 60 years' accumulated soot from the chimney and distribute it all over the carpets and furniture. During his time in the UK, he purchased a BSA motorbike and travelled 3,335 miles around Europe with friends, visiting many well-known tourist attractions including the Swiss Alps. He and his friends also went on a special expedition to Ireland to buy steak which they hoped to enjoy back home; unfortunately, the weather turned unseasonably hot on the return trip and they had to douse their steaks in vinegar to make them passably edible! But love? It seems Noel's 'First Love' was his BSA motorbike which made all these rare adventures possible.

Bus Bash to Bright

The trip had 42 participants with members and friends from Beaumaris, Beaumaris Bay, Beaumaris Heights and Sandy Bay Probus Clubs. It offered an excellent range of sights and experiences in a historic and scenic part of Victoria - and in delightful autumn weather, including light morning frosts and sunny days. We had a most enjoyable day in the Beechworth area, highlights of which were a re-enactment of the trial of Ned Kelly in the original courthouse where it happened and our President, Eric, donning his judicial wig and red gown, endeavouring to keep us all in reasonable order so as to deliver his verdict to the prisoner: “Guilty”. We were driven around Beechworth by Pat, local historian, who was able to point out several interesting features to us. While many of us had been in the area before, we gained some new insights from the knowledgeable commentary provided. But, just as any army marches on its stomach, so it is for our Probus Clubs: the trip included wine tastings on both the first and last days, and also cheese, olive and mustard tastings, quite apart from the delicious meals at our motel. From the comments afterwards, the trip was greatly enjoyed by the entire group.

Investment Group

At the May meeting, financial advisor, Bruce Lanyon (left) gave a very upbeat talk on the outlook for Australian stocks and shares. “There are always downturns,” he said, “followed by sustained upturns.” He suggested that Oil Search, Flexigroup, Customers Limited and Seek, were worthy of a close look. At the June meeting, at 9 am, the group will hear from Richard Kirby who is a Company Director and a Fellow of Chartered Accountants - as well as Immediate Past President of the VGA – on whether the global macro picture is a resistance to buying stocks with record low P/Es.
